

SUBSTANCE USE AND ADDICTION SERVICES IN TORONTO

Where to go when you're looking for help

Updated: January 2026

Substance use and addiction can impact anyone. These experiences are complex, and there's no single reason why they happen. Whether you're just starting to explore your relationship with substances or actively seeking support, this guide is here to connect you with services that meet you where you're at.

Inside, you'll find everything from acute care services, including withdrawal management and rapid access addiction medicine (RAAM) clinics, to hospital and community-based supports such as harm reduction supplies, peer support, counselling or more intensive treatment programs, as well as resource directories that help you navigate housing, mental health and social services. Whether you're looking for a safe space to talk, tools to reduce harm or longer-term treatment options, this guide brings together supports designed to prioritize your safety, dignity and well-being. If you are a family member or loved one needing support, help and resources are available at the end of this guide.
